TALL BRIDGE.—There is a bridge in the course of construction on the Buffalo and New York Cify Railroad where it crosses the Gennessee river, near Portageville.—When completed it will be 230 feet high; and 500 feet span, stone piers set on the bed of the rock, and carried up 30 feet high from the bed of the river, a few rods above the upper falls. From the top of the piers the wood work rises 200 feet, and so perfect is the model of the bridge, that it is thought there will not be the least tremor or motion under the heaviest train of cars that may ever have occasion to pass over it. The timber grown on 160 acres has already been exhausted, and 50 acres more purchased. It is thought 210 acres will afford timber enough to complete the superstructure. Some idea may be formed of the size of the bridge, as it
